The American Bar Association has issued a formal opinion to attorneys regarding our duty to warn clients regarding third party access to electronic communications. Third party access to such communications may result in your possible loss of the right to assert the privilege of attorney-client confidentiality regarding such communications, as well as having other adverse consequences. Third party access can include any employer provided email. Attorney-client confidentiality is lost if a communication is shared with a third party, such as including any non-clients on letters or emails. Please discuss with us any confidentiality and privilege questions you may have.
